Beautiful LILIES

Lilies are true aristocrats of the garden. Few flowers, if any, can equal them in color, form and fragrance. The Auratum, the Regale and the Speciosum types combine well with perennials in borders or formal gardens. Lilies like Henryi, Tigrinum, and Pardalinum giganteum can be used effectively to add color and interest to shrub plantings. Lilies need fertile soil that is well drained. If they are interplanted with perennials they will have the advantage of shade around their roots, which they like. Plant Lilies in groups.

DAHLIAS

In late summer and autumn the Dahlia is king of the garden. From a decorative standpoint this showy flower has few rivals because the hybridizers have bent every effort to achieve perfection in form, color, and texture. What is more, the Dahlia is in a class by itself because of the unusual beauty which many of the varieties attain.

When Dahlias are used for indoor decorations, either singly or in formal arrangements, they have a beauty all their own.

We are offering here a collection of tried-and-true varieties which will give you a fine color-range in addition to an abundance of cut-flower material.

Few flowers are easier to grow. The Dahlia requires full sun, good drainage, and ordinary soil. If you would have large flowers of exhibition size, it is best to allow only one stalk to reach maturity. When the plants approach the budding stage, you can have the pleasure of disbudding to produce prize flowers, or you can allow all the buds to develop if you are in need of cut-flower material.

Avalon. Beautiful clear yellow.

Frances La Rocco. Most popular of the light yellows.

Jane Cowl. Copper and gold; very large.

Jean Kerr. White. Fine for cut-flowers.

Jersey's Beacon. Chinese-red with lighter shadings.

Jersey's Beauty. A very fine pink.

Jersey Souvenir. Rose.

Kentucky. Beautiful orange. Should be in every garden collection.

Le Toreador. Glowing deep red.

Omar Khayyam. Chinese red and orange.

Sagamore. Golden yellow and orange.

White King. Pure white.

15 cts. each      Any 7 Roots for $1.00

1 of each variety, 12 Roots in all, for only $1.50
